

On View

20 Public Art Shows to Get Excited About in New York This Fall

See work by Ai Weiwei, Dale Chihuly, and John Chamberlain on the streets of New York.

Sarah Cascone, September 22, 2017

Tristan Eaton, Brooklyn Crush. Courtesy of QuallsBenson.

SHARE

If you've so much as glanced at your calendar, you know that fall has officially commenced in all its foliated glory. In honor of the official turning of the season, we've rounded up a comprehensive list of public art to see across New York City as the leaves begin to change. Happy autumn!

Rob Fischer, City, 2017. Courtesy of Derek Eller Gallery.

16. "Rob Fischer: City" at the Park Avenue Malls

Derek Eller Gallery and the Fund for Park Avenue have teamed up with the Parks Department to present a massive, multi-chambered structure of clear glass, steel, and aluminum created by Rob Fischer. The skyscraper-inspired work, which incorporates silkscreen inks that will change in appearance over time, is part of the 50th-anniversary celebration for Art in the Parks.

Park Avenue Malls at 54th Street; through November 15, 2017.